Q&A with Martin G. Morgado

Q Tell our readers about your banking career?

My career in banking spans nearly 40 years. After graduating from St. Michael's College with a degree in finance, I joined Centerbank in Waterbury, where I completed their management training, focusing on commercial lending and branch management. I then joined Nutmeg Federal Savings and Loan in Danbury, where I held positions in branch management and lending. I joined Ives Bank, (FKA Savings Bank of Danbury) in 2001 and served the bank in numerous roles, including head of retail lending, Executive Vice President, and Chief Operations Officer. I also played a key role in launching the bank's successful mortgage banking division. In 2016, I became President and Chief Executive Officer of the bank and have held that position since then.

Q Describe your role at Ives Bank?

As Chief Executive Officer I am responsible for working with our Board of Directors to oversee all bank operations, sixteen branches and office locations, with over 200 employees, and the bank Foundation. My responsibilities include the bank's growth strategy, including geographic expansion into new markets, and product and service capabilities. Part of my role includes active involvement in the community – I serve on various boards, including Chairman of the Connecticut Bankers Association, Housing Development Fund, Danbury Housing Authority, and Catholic Charities. I am also chairman of the Western Connecticut State University Foundation, chairman of the Greater Danbury Chamber of Commerce, chair of the Palace Theater board of directors, and member of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York's Community Depository Institutions Advisory Council. With the appointment by the CBA, I will be incoming chairman of the Connecticut Bankers Association for a new term.

Q How does your bank view its future in Connecticut?

Ives Bank is here to stay! The bank opened its doors on July 14, 1849, in Danbury's historic Charles W. Ives Home – almost 177 years ago. Although its reach and services have grown in the almost two centuries since its founding, its mission remains, as its slogan indicates, "People servicing people."

The bank is the City of Danbury's oldest continuously operating business and is the fourth oldest bank in the state of Connecticut.

What made the bank different from the start was that it was a mutual savings bank, owned by its depositors and established to meet the banking needs of Danbury residents. At that time, Danbury's hat trade was about to switch its method of payment to cash from a modified barter system. For the first time, the workers in Danbury's main industry would have actual money in their pockets and could become savers. Many of the bank's customers had a bank where they could deposit their wages. The bank evolved from offering passbook savings deposits to lending out mortgages and purchasing bonds.

As committed as the Bank is to the region's sense of history, it is also planning for the future. The bank's sixteen branches and office locations cover northwestern CT with its Norwalk and Stamford locations reaching into the southwestern part of the state. The bank's recent rebranding to Ives Bank enables the organization to focus on its expansion efforts into a wider regional and statewide footprint.

As for the future in Connecticut, geographic expansion, banking innovation, and continued customer and community support will continue to be our anchor. Ives Bank recognizes that as a community bank, it is important for us to do more than provide quality banking services; we must also be good neighbors and citizens and give back to the communities we serve.

Q Talent recruitment and development is a major CBA initiative, to ensure banks have access to a pool of qualified staff members. As a bank CEO, what would you tell a young person who was considering a career in banking?

PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE

From the President's Desk

Ever increasing attention is being focused on the cost of living and affordability, particularly in housing, both across Connecticut and nationwide. What gets less attention is the vital role that Connecticut banks play in helping customers achieve the dream of home ownership amid this challenge. This Winter edition of CBA Quarterly looks at the amazing range of bank volunteer and community outreach activities that our member banks engage in, to help our customers and future homeowners to realize that ever more difficult goal of buying a home.

Here in Connecticut, owning that first home is being stymied by a number of factors, but particularly by the lack of new units being built, causing a dearth in supply, while pushing up prices on those units that are up for sale. Add to that consistently higher interest rates, and a large number of existing mortgages that have covid-era below market interest rates. That gives us huge numbers of homeowners that would normally move up and out of their starter homes, staying put to preserve their low, and very affordable, interest rates. So where do potential homeowners go? Not surprisingly, they fill up any existing and new rental housing, creating yet another economic cycle of short supply and increasing prices. This dual crisis of housing affordability - and availability - led to a special state legislative session last November.

Lawmakers initially passed an omnibus housing bill at the end of the 2025 Session, intended to create more affordable housing in Connecticut. As suspected, Governor Lamont vetoed it, largely due to the bill's radical usurping of local zoning and building control and powers. However, the Legislature worked out a compromise with Governor Lamont in the form of House Bill 8002, which aims to "empower" towns to plan for responsible, data driven housing growth through a collaborative framework. Municipalities will still be required to prepare and submit to the State a Housing Growth Plan or participate in such a plan that would to be developed by regional "Councils of Government."

This legislation is good news for the state and will augment what Connecticut banks are doing in a major way, to support new home ownership – and let's not forget, more housing units. We'll be conducting a "deep dive" analysis on the new law, especially its direct and indirect impacts on our banking industry, some of which are positive. Look for the CBA analysis this June.

With that as a backdrop, it's timely that the theme for this issue of the CBA Quarterly is "Helping Customers Achieve the Home Ownership Dream." The articles in this issue spotlight how Connecticut banks help their customers to attain the home ownership dream. We all know buying a first home is a challenge and many Connecticut banks have unique home-grown programs for first-time home buyers. These may also include downpayment assistance programs in partnership with agencies such as the Connecticut Housing Finance Authority and the Federal Housing Administration.

An article by Liberty Bank tells the experience of a first-time home buyer and a mom who was looking for a home where she and her daughter could live. Liberty partnered with Neighborhood Housing Services (NHS) to renovate a historic home in New Haven, never an easy task, which had been vacant for 20 years.

Northwest Community Bank's article highlights a different type of partnership to create a new development of 10 net-zero affordable homes, which is nearing completion in Norfolk. The Haystack Woods project was developed by The Foundation for Norfolk Living, with support from the Connecticut Department of Housing, and construction financing from the bank.

In an article from The First Bank of Greenwich, Frank Gaudio writes about the bank's personalized and hands-on approach to customers seeking to buy a home. The bank provides guidance, responsible lending options, and unwavering support to customers at every step in the process.

Check out the article by John Francis of Newtown Savings Bank, which details the longstanding important role of community banks in pursuing innovative ways to support those in their communities who need it most. An essential part of this effort for the bank is not only its affordable housing initiatives, but being a strong resource on community revitalization and home renovation programs.

Be sure to read the article by Ana Dyer from FHLB Boston, as she discusses the bank's powerful homeownership assistance programs that can result in even lower down payments and closing costs

As we know, housing is a key driver of economic growth and has traditionally led the country out of recessions, created sustained and robust GDP growth, and let's not forget, provides employment to thousands of people in the skilled trades. It's vital to our state, region, and our Connecticut banks play a critical role in making that happen. The CBA stands ready to work with all stakeholders and policy makers on potential solutions to meet the needs of our communities for available and affordable housing. ~

The challenges that banks face in finding talent is something that we deal with daily. The geographic proximity to Hartford and New York City, which are major business hubs, is a challenge itself. The demographics don't help either – the labor market in CT is tight, driven by low unemployment and an aging workforce. Other challenges that add to the complexity of finding talent with banking and technical skills include competition between peer banks, fintech businesses, and attracting and retaining younger employees.

As a bank CEO, and involvement with local academic institutions, I am familiar with both sides of the equation – employer and apprentice. For recent graduates or young professionals considering a career in banking, I would suggest acquiring hands-on and practical experience by securing an internship and/or taking banking related classes. Other important considerations include networking at industry events, career fairs, and connecting with people on LinkedIn or other social media that are open to mentoring.

A shortcut that I can recommend is joining an organization such as the CBA that has built in resources that I have mentioned above. The CBA website has a lot of resources available to young professionals that are interested in exploring banking. CBA's BankTalentHQ offers talent management resources and combines partnerships with other banking associations across the US. Individuals that are interested in banking careers can visit the site to access tools, resources, and information, in addition to job postings. This would definitely be tool that I would recommend.

Q What do you see as the greatest opportunities and challenges facing Connecticut banks?

In the short term, Connecticut banks are experiencing a different set of challenges and opportunities brought on by the industry itself and the new administration's state and federal investments. As in the past, these set of changes represent both sides of the coin – plus and minus. From a broad perspective, these investments are aimed to help local economic development with a focus on underserved markets on programs that may include small businesses, housing, and "green" or energy efficient programs. Deregulation policies, while welcomed with open arms, might reduce the regulatory burden, but may have strings attached associated with consumer credit interest rate ceilings that will create other issues for banks, such as reducing profitability and restricting credit policies for lending and other products. Bottom line – a hit on profitability.

Challenges in 2026 continue to focus on acquiring and retaining deposits. Technology also continues to be a challenge from a fraud and cybersecurity perspective. Investments in technology to protect against these types of fraud – institutional and customers - will be a big hit to the bottom line. This also holds true for other technology-related expenditures that banks will need to catch up or supersede competitor product and service delivery. From a talent perspective, as I mentioned above, this topic continues to be a challenge in CT due to a tight labor market, low unemployment, competition from bank and non-bank employers with similar/overlapping transferable skills, and an aging workforce that's exiting the market and limited interest from younger employees to replace them. Competition also holds a spot in the challenges that we face. This includes larger national banks with deeper pockets, credit unions and fin-techs that can operate with lower tax burdens and more flexibility.

On the opportunities side – although technology can be a challenge – it is also an opportunity to help drive operational efficiency and lower costs. The technology umbrella in this case includes using Artificial Intelligence (AI) and machine learning to help detect and mitigate fraud; data science and analytics to support customer acquisition and personalized customer service. The alternative to a proprietary technology solution to address these benefits may be partnering with fin-techs to offer competitive alternatives. A cost benefit analysis to assess a proprietary vs. fin-tech solution will help drive those decisions. Other opportunities include more personalized and relationship specialized services such as commercial real estate lending and other small business services. In point of fact, branches can be retrofitted to become centers for personalized service that can also support relationship-based lending and wealth management services, in addition to traditional branch functions. Other opportunities to drive growth can also include expanding traditional treasury management by optimizing payments, cash flow, liquidity, and mitigating risk.

Q You have served on the CBA's Board of Directors for many years. Why is it important to have a state banking association?

The Connecticut Bankers Association (CBA) is an important resource for Connecticut based banks for a variety of reasons. The CBA is a resource for bank leaders as it helps proactively inform member banks of any banking industry, legal, Federal, regulatory, and legislative information that may impact on the bank and its operations. The CBA provides advocacy and support for member banks at the state and federal level by promoting legislative and regulatory activities that benefit their collective interests and perspectives. CBA resources engage with banking representatives, including the Connecticut Attorney General, Connecticut General Assembly, and other state and federal officials to achieve this goal. In addition, the CBA provides a platform and events where members can network to discuss banking issues and trends. Educational components such as training and development also support members to ensure they are up to speed on industry information that may affect their careers and institutions.

The association has grown exponentially over the years and has expanded its membership, leadership, and advocacy for its members, which now totals 58 banks in the state. I deeply appreciate the hard work and dedication of past officers and board members that have cultivated the organization to what it represents today. I feel fortunate that I will be working with a very experienced team at the CBA – recognized as a premier and most respected associations.

I look forward to a very productive and successful year. Thank you. ☺

Financing the Future: Connecticut's Housing Strategy and Emerging Opportunities for Banks

Art Corey
Executive Vice President &
General Counsel
Connecticut Bankers Association

By any measure, Connecticut's housing shortage has moved from a policy concern to a business reality. Employers are struggling to attract and retain talent, communities face rising cost pressures, and economic growth is constrained by limited housing across income levels. For Connecticut's banks, this is not an abstract issue—it is directly tied to the economic strength and vitality of the communities they serve.

Over the past three legislative sessions, the Connecticut General Assembly has taken a more targeted and pragmatic approach to housing policy, advancing a series of incremental, but meaningful changes. Rather than pursuing a single sweeping reform, lawmakers have focused on improving how housing projects are structured and financed—expanding available subsidies, streamlining local approvals, and reducing development uncertainty that can delay or derail projects. These developments are beginning to change how housing projects are financed—and where banks can play a role.

A consistent focus has been on improving the viability of housing developments from a financing perspective. In 2023, Public Act 23-45 directed the Connecticut Housing Finance Authority (CHFA) to establish a small multifamily lending program focused on properties with two to twenty units—an often under-capitalized segment of the market. By expanding access to capital, including through CDFIs and similar partners, the state is supporting neighborhood-scale development and rehabilitation.

That same year, Public Act 23-207 established a workforce housing framework combining tools such as tax credits, potential property tax relief, and rental assistance. The impact for lenders is straightforward: improved project economics. When incentives are layered effectively, projects that once struggled to pencil out can move into a more bankable range, particularly in mixed-income developments.

The 2024 legislative session built on this foundation with an emphasis on reducing development friction and preserving existing units. Public Act 24-143 streamlined local review for certain adaptive reuse projects, including the conversion of vacant nursing homes into multifamily housing, while other changes refined the tax treatment of income-restricted properties. These adjustments go directly to issues central to credit decisions—development costs, timing, certainty, and operating stability.

The legislature also strengthened municipal development capacity. Public Act 24-81 provides technical assistance to municipalities seeking to expand housing production, while Public Act 24-86 refines workforce housing requirements with greater emphasis on middle-income units.

Another notable development for lenders came in 2025 with the creation of the Homes for CT loan program. Established under Public Act 25-174, the program authorizes CHFA to guarantee a portion of loans made by participating banks and credit unions, creating a potential credit enhancement tool. From a banking perspective, this can help bring more projects within acceptable risk parameters in a higher-cost environment. Banking Committee Co-Chair Rep. Jason Doucette (D-Manchester) has been a leading champion of this initiative and continues to work with industry stakeholders, including the Connecticut Bankers Association and CHFA, to refine and strengthen the program.

The 2025 session also reinforced the state's focus on adaptive reuse and preservation. Public Act 25-164 supports commercial-to-residential conversions, while Public Act 25-73 expands the use of local housing trust funds. In many communities, the fastest way to add housing is through repositioning existing assets—often an attractive lending profile given existing infrastructure and shorter timelines.

Taken together, these legislative efforts point to a clear direction. Connecticut is building a more comprehensive housing framework that addresses multiple points in the development lifecycle. As housing policy is increasingly implemented at the local level, banks that are engaged with municipal leaders and developers will be better positioned to identify emerging opportunities.

For bank leaders, the question is less about whether to engage and more about how these evolving tools align with existing business strategies. Housing is increasingly central to local economic development and long-term customer growth, and many institutions are already active in this space. The current policy environment creates additional avenues to deepen that engagement—whether as lenders, partners with CHFA and the Connecticut Department of Housing, or collaborators with municipalities, developers, and CDFIs. The Connecticut Bankers Association can also serve as a resource and convener, helping connect banks with policymakers and industry participants. Institutions that continue to build on these relationships will be well positioned to take advantage of opportunities to participate in addressing Connecticut's housing needs. ↻

Financing What's Possible: Northwest Community Bank's Role in the Haystack Woods Affordable Homes Project

By Gregori Tonon, Executive VP, Chief Lending Officer, Northwest Community Bank

In Norfolk, Connecticut, a new development of ten net-zero affordable homes is nearing completion. The project—Haystack Woods—was developed by The Foundation for Norfolk Living, with support from the Connecticut Department of Housing (DOH) and construction financing from Northwest Community Bank.

While affordable housing often comes with financial challenges, this project demonstrates how careful structuring, experienced partners, and flexible lending approaches can bring technically complex initiatives to the finish line.

A Project Built from Multiple Funding Sources

The Foundation for Norfolk Living, a volunteer-led nonprofit, began work on Haystack Woods after acquiring the site through a federal Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) administered through DOH. Those funds supported the road and utility work needed to prepare the site for construction, as well as the acquisition of the site.

The development model requires stacking several forms of support:

- DOH funding, covering approximately 60% of the construction cost.
- Bank construction financing, covering roughly 40%.
- Future sale proceeds, which will pay back the construction loan as each home closes.

“Any of these projects require multiple funding sources that you essentially cobble together,” said Kate Briggs Johnson, President of the Foundation. “Because these are homeownership units, we could responsibly borrow for a portion of the cost and repay that when the homes sell.”

The DOH funding is classified as a mortgage for oversight purposes, but functions more like a grant that permanently subsidizes the homes. This structure allows sale prices to remain significantly below construction cost, with required income qualifications for buyers.

Why Traditional Lending Didn't Immediately Fit

The Foundation initially expected that conventional bank financing might not work, given the gap between construction cost and sale price. As Briggs Johnson noted, “Our loan-to-value ratio was such that we thought it probably wouldn't be acceptable.”

Northwest Community Bank's Structuring Approach

Northwest Community Bank had prior experience financing housing trust models—such as the Litchfield Housing Trust—and understood the layered structure required.

“Normally in construction lending, all the borrower's money goes in first and we have stricter requirements,” said Margret Warner, Senior Vice President, Commercial Lender at Northwest Community Bank. “This project works differently. As work is completed, DOH funds its portion, and we fund ours. It's not standard, but it fits the needs of projects like these.”

The bank understood the flexibility needed to make the deal feasible, including:

- A higher loan-to-value ratio
- Streamlined closing costs
- Risk evaluation based on prior affordable housing experience

“This is what we do. It's a feel-good project—and a necessary one—for our community.”
— Margret Warner, Northwest Community Bank

Briggs Johnson noted that Northwest Community Bank was more competitive than other lenders the Foundation approached. “Northwest Community Bank adjusted some requirements, and that made the difference. They kept closing costs down and understood the DOH process.”

The Consultant and Builder: Key Technical Roles

Housing Enterprises Inc., led by David Berto, provided the technical expertise to assemble funding applications, coordinate DOH compliance, and manage payment requisitions.

“The reality of affordable housing is that it doesn’t make financial sense on its own,” Berto said. “You’re restricted on incomes, restricted on sale prices, and costs exceed what the homes can carry. Every project requires gap funding, and construction financing is essential because the homes must be built before they can be sold.”

Berto emphasized that Northwest Community Bank’s participation was decisive. “Without the construction funding, we wouldn’t be able to do this. The bank’s role is extremely important.”

“Local connections make small-town housing possible. This is where community banking shines.”
 – David Berto, Housing Enterprises Inc.

Builder David Jones delivered ten detached, high efficiency homes modeled after his CT Zero Energy Challenge award winning build. The net-zero aspect bolstered the project’s competitiveness for state funding and will allow homeowners protection from energy cost increases. Plus, thoughtfully designed systems and extremely durable materials mean lower ongoing costs.

How the Repayment Structure Works

Haystack Woods uses a straightforward payback model. When a home sells, approximately one-tenth of the total construction mortgage is repaid. DOH’s funding remains as a permanent subsidy, while bank financing is repaid as units close.

It is condominium style ownership. Buyers own the homes and the land is owned by the HOA. Resale prices are capped so that future income-qualified families can purchase the unit.

A Practical Example of Mission-Aligned Lending

Northwest Community Bank’s involvement was not driven by volume or scale, but by alignment with the bank’s commitment to the community and history of supporting affordable housing.

As Berto summarized, “The bank stepped up so the project could move forward without delays. They played a very important role in making it work.”

Haystack Woods, Norfolk, CT

- 10 net-zero, energy-efficient homes
- 40% construction financing: Northwest Community Bank
- 60% funding: Connecticut Department of Housing
- Volunteer-led nonprofit development
- Features: solar, battery backup, EV-ready parking
- Targeting highest level LEED, NGBS, Zero Energy Ready certifications
- Total low cost of ownership

FHLBank Boston Helps Member Banks Assist Customers with Home Ownership

By Ana Dyer, Senior Vice President, Chief Business Officer, Federal Home Loan Bank of Boston

The real estate market in Connecticut has undergone significant changes over the past few years. But one persistent challenge remains: a limited supply of available homes for lower-income households.

New residential developments in numerous Connecticut towns and cities tend to feature larger homes with higher price points, often making them inaccessible to first-time buyers. The housing supply issue has been further exacerbated because homeowners who locked in low mortgage interest rates in 2020 and 2021 are now reluctant to sell their properties due to higher interest rates.

The lack of inventory and strong buyer demand have put upward pressure on home prices, creating an obstacle for homebuyers, particularly first-time homebuyers.

Over the years, Connecticut banks have turned to various programs to help make homeownership possible for their customers, including Federal Home Loan Bank of Boston's (FHLBank Boston's) homeownership assistance programs – Equity Builder Program, Housing Our Workforce, and Lift Up Homeownership.

The programs offer grants to FHLBank Boston's member financial institutions in New England so they can assist income-eligible borrowers with down payments and closing costs.

Equity Builder Program is for first-time homebuyers with incomes at or below 80% of the area median income. Since the program's creation in 2003, more than 4,760 homebuyers have been awarded grants. In 2026, individual households are eligible to receive up to $32,099 through Equity Builder Program.

Recognizing that home prices can be unaffordable for households with slightly higher incomes – including for people earning more modest incomes like teachers, paramedics, and municipal workers – FHLBank Boston launched Housing Our Workforce in 2019. The program provides grants to cover down payments and closing costs to borrowers earning more than 80% and up to 120% of the area median income. In 2026, income-eligible homebuyers can receive grants of up to $25,000 through Housing Our Workforce.

In 2023, FHLBank Boston introduced a third down-payment assistance program, Lift Up Homeownership. The program provides grants to first-generation homebuyers earning up to 120% of the area median income to purchase their first home. Eligible homebuyers can receive grants of up to $40,000 in 2026 through Lift Up Homeownership.

Windsor Federal Bank has used all three of FHLBank Boston's homeownership assistance programs to award 34 grants to income-eligible homebuyers since 2021.

A respected presence in Greater Hartford's mortgage sector, Windsor Federal Bank's loan officers have forged strong partnerships with local real estate agents to help borrowers, particularly first-time homebuyers, navigate the complexities of purchasing a home.

"The beauty of FHLBank Boston's homeownership assistance programs is that they are true grant programs," said Daniel Silva, first vice president, residential and consumer lending at Windsor Federal Bank.

"This is especially important because even when homebuyers qualify to purchase a home and identify a home in their price range, finding the funds for a down payment can be extremely difficult," explained Silva.

Silva explained that the bank has its own first-time homebuyer program. By pairing Windsor Federal Bank's program with FHLBank Boston grants, homeownership has become a reality for borrowers that were struggling with down-payment and closing costs.

He recalls a single mother, earning less than 80% of the area median income, who was eager to buy her first home in Windsor.

"Sierra was raising her 9 year old child and had been living on the second floor of a multifamily home for nearly a decade. She never thought homeownership was within reach, so she hadn't explored the possibility. That changed when she connected with a Realtor who was familiar with Windsor Federal and our grant and homeownership programs," said Silva. "With that support, Sierra was able to purchase a four bedroom Cape in a more desirable town with a stronger school system for her child. While her monthly housing cost increased slightly – going from rent to a mortgage – she now has the benefit of building equity instead of paying toward someone else's property. Thanks to the Lift Up Homeownership grant and down-payment assistance of $50,000, she was able to purchase a home valued at over $200,000 with less than $700 out of pocket."

Silva, who has more than two decades of experience in mortgage lending, said FHLBank Boston's housing and community investment team has been very open in their communications and helpful when trying to answer questions from clients and real estate agents.

"Home ownership is a key tool for building wealth. Enabling someone to own their own home sets them up for success, and it provides stability in our communities. Our team works closely with members and offers training and materials to help them assist their customers because we want to promote affordable and sustainable homeownership in the communities that our members serve," said Kenneth Willis, senior vice president, director of housing and community investment at FHLBank Boston.

The application period for the three homeownership assistance programs is open through February 27, 2026, with homebuyer enrollments beginning on April 1, 2026.

FHLBank Boston members that are interested in learning more about the programs can register for one of several trainings scheduled through the months of February and March by visiting this page.

MEET A BANKER

The Meet a Banker profile is a new standing feature in the CBA Quarterly. It is part of the CBA’s Talent Recruitment, Development and Retention (TRDR) initiative, which aims to support member banks as they work to attract talent and help employees build relevant skills that promote long-term banking careers.

Lauren Sposato, Assistant Vice President, Associate Director of Marketing, Dime Bank, Norwich, CT.

Q Where did you work before your first job in banking, and how did you get your start in the banking industry?

Before working at Dime Bank, I served as the Executive Director of the Clinton CT Chamber of Commerce. In that role I was responsible for memberships, community events, fundraising, and marketing initiatives to help promote local businesses. My experience working at the Chamber was a perfect segue into my first role at Dime Bank as Community Relations & Social Media Coordinator. As a proud Dime Bank customer for many years, I was excited to utilize my skillset to help the bank coordinate volunteer and sponsorship opportunities in our community.

Q What has been your career path in banking, to date?

Since joining Dime Bank in 2017 as Community Relations & Social Media Coordinator, I have had the opportunity to grow into my current role as Assistant Vice President, Associate Director of Marketing. Many times, employees in marketing roles may be referred to as “non-bankers.” However, I have had the opportunity to bolster my banking education by attending the Connecticut School of Finance & Management (CSFM), where I did a two-year deep dive into finance and banking. This experience has helped me better understand the complex operations of banking, and in turn, has helped me in my role in Dime’s Marketing & Communications Department.

Q How does your current job contribute to the overall success of your bank and community?

In my role, I believe my biggest contribution to the success of the bank has been the responsibility of running our Change Management program. This initiative was designed to help our team members embrace and navigate change in this fast-paced environment. This skillset is essential to success, both as individual contributors, and as an organization.

Additionally, I feel that helping the bank be more visible in our communities by supporting our marketing efforts, and serving on our sponsorships committee has been a big contribution. By sponsoring local events, providing volunteer hours, and grants to local nonprofit organizations, my team is dedicated to giving back to all of the communities that Dime Bank serves.

Lauren Sposato

Q What motivates you to remain in banking, and why would you encourage someone to consider a career in banking?

What motivates me to remain in banking is simply...working at Dime Bank. There is an intangible quality to the culture of a workplace that can set a business apart and make it a great place to work. I can wholeheartedly say this is true about Dime Bank.

I would encourage others to consider a career in banking because of the opportunities it presents. Our employees are made up of people of all career backgrounds, from artists, to non-profit staffers, coffee baristas, and more. In banking there is a place for a multitude of skills sets. In each role there are opportunities for growth, training, and meaningful connections. ☺

“ In my role, I believe my biggest contribution to the success of the bank has been the responsibility of running our Change Management program. ”

Q&A with Judith Corprew, President & CEO, New Haven Bank

Q How did you get your start in banking?

I am a second-generation banker. My mom began with a community bank, survived many mergers in CT and eventually retired from Chase after 25 years. I remember the days when she would get calls on a Saturday to attend the ATM replenishment! When I turned 16 and expressed the desire to work after school, her networking skills landed me my first role as an operations clerk. With a few branch experiences, I landed a part-time assistant branch manager role in a store branch during college, and post college, the additional roles and responsibilities continued.

Q What advice would you give to individuals who want to advance their careers in the industry?

If you have the ability to cross-train, shadow or volunteer for other areas, within your company, do so, to diversify your knowledge and exposure to the enterprise model. The detail and perspective from an experienced colleague are very valuable and it also affords an opportunity to navigate the application of your own transferable skills.

Q How do you view the Connecticut banking marketplace, as compared to other states, based on your previous roles?

Connecticut's banking marketplace is comprised of a strong regulatory and community framework that protects both banks and consumers and reflects a commitment to a safe and sound framework. Overall, the Department of Banking and Connecticut Bankers Association are crucial to the financial services industry and great partners in this industry.

Q From your perspective, what are the greatest challenges facing Connecticut's banking industry?

Competition impact from the presence of many credit unions and larger banks, with both having the ability to adapt to changing consumer preferences and absorb more risk. Secondly, the rise of and adaption to fin-tech companies for product offerings, while rewarding to assets, transaction activity and other opportunities; banks face increased risk, regulatory pressures and compliance requirements.

Q Conversely, what are the biggest opportunities for growth?

Enhancing digital experiences to meet customer expectations and manage compliance and regulator risk. Traditional banking is shifting, therefore increasing the focus on digital transformation and expanding product and payment capabilities are important.

Q What do you see as the most important roles of a community bank? How has your bank positioned itself in the marketplace?

Community banks' roles are key to supporting local customers, nonprofits and small businesses. Building relationships and providing exceptional customer service are qualities that are still important to the needs of a community. Our bank prides itself on knowing our customer, their business and mission, and personal insight. New Haven Bank makes decisions locally, reviews with flexible credit standards and offers services that are lower in fees and reinvests over 60% in our local area, which contributes to the vitality of local dollars.

Q Technology is playing an increasingly central role in banking. How has technology changed the customer experience? What is the role of bank branches for those who value a personal connection with their bank?

Mobile banking, online banking, and digital banking have changed the customer experience in many positive ways, and we observed throughout the pandemic and after, that customers could maintain their accounts virtually. This evolution also helped banks to understand customer patterns more, and we adapted operationally to those behaviors. Overall, it still appears that some branches still play a role for those that need a personal connection with their bank, and having access to a branch is a significant factor for many customers.

Q Looking ahead, what do you think the banking industry will look like in five years?

I believe the banking industry will undergo more shifts in the next five years; with emerging technologies, adoption of AI and fin-tech solutions, shifting bank opportunities strategically to support and be a resource to an evolving and specialized customer base. Community banks will still be a presence, providing personal touch as a partner, and servicing with technical awareness. ☺

Helping Our Customers Achieve the Home Ownership Dream

By Frank J. Gaudio, President & CEO, The First Bank of Greenwich

For many families, owning a home represents far more than a financial milestone. It's a place to build memories, establish roots, and create long-term stability. For others, it can also open the door to new opportunities whether that means purchasing a second home, expanding an investment portfolio, or building generational wealth.

At The First Bank of Greenwich, we see homeownership as a cornerstone of thriving communities. While our roots are here in Connecticut and New York, we're proud to support customers pursuing home ownership in other states as well. Wherever life takes you, our team is committed to helping you turn that dream into reality.

Because we live and work in the same communities our customers call home, we understand the local housing landscape, the challenges buyers face, and the opportunities that can make home ownership more accessible. At The First Bank of Greenwich, we provide personalized guidance, responsible lending options, and unwavering support at every step of the journey.

Buying a home can feel overwhelming, especially for first-time buyers. Rising housing costs, limited inventory, and uncertainty about the mortgage process often create barriers that discourage potential homeowners. The First Bank of Greenwich believes those barriers shouldn't stand in the way of a family's future.

We don't just process applications we partner with our customers to build a path forward. Unlike large national lenders, we take the time to understand each customer's unique story. Whether someone is just beginning to save for a down payment or is ready to make an offer, we tailor our support to their needs.

Our team helps customers:

- Review their credit and identify opportunities for improvement
- Understand mortgage options and choose the right fit
- Explore down payment assistance and first-time homebuyer programs
- Prepare for long-term financial success as homeowners

This hands-on approach ensures that customers never feel like they’re navigating the process alone. We believe education is empowerment, and we take pride in helping buyers feel confident, informed, and prepared.

Every borrower is different, and so are their financial goals. Our mortgage products are designed with flexibility in mind, including:

- Fixed-rate and adjustable-rate mortgages
- Low down payment options
- Programs for first-time buyers
- Portfolio loans for unique financial situations
- Refinancing solutions to support long-term affordability and access equity helping homeowners reduce monthly payments, and reinvest in repairs, upgrades, or financial stability

We look beyond the numbers and consider the full picture of a customer’s financial situation and circumstances to determine the best loan route whether through our own portfolio of products or through trusted broker partnerships.

When more families own homes, the entire community benefits. Homeownership encourages neighborhood stability, supports local businesses, and contributes to long-term economic growth. The First Bank of Greenwich reinvests deposits back into the neighborhoods we serve. Every mortgage we assist with is an investment in the future of our towns and cities, and we’re proud to play a role in helping families put down roots and build generational wealth.

Our relationship with customers doesn’t end at closing. We’re committed to supporting homeowners throughout their financial journey, not just during the mortgage process. Whether it’s refinancing, planning for future goals, or navigating life’s unexpected changes, we remain a trusted resource long after the keys are in hand.

Helping customers achieve the dream of homeownership is one of the most meaningful parts of our work. It’s a privilege to guide families through such an important milestone, and we’re honored to be a trusted partner in their journey. The First Bank of Greenwich believes that when our neighbors succeed, our entire community thrives.

“ While our roots are here in Connecticut and New York, we’re proud to support customers pursuing homeownership in other states as well. ”

Realizing a Dream: The Story of a First-time Homebuyer

By Fantina Borges, First Vice President, Mortgage Sales and Retail Lending, Liberty Bank

Liberty Bank is a community bank – one that upholds its brand promise: to “Be Community Kind.” To put it simply, we are a bank that cares about people, and we see its promise in action when we see how Team Liberty goes the extra mile to help aspiring homeowners.

To illustrate this, I want to share with you the story of Ashley Bailey. For Ashley, connecting with the Neighborhood Housing Services of New Haven and Liberty Bank changed her life.

Armed with the knowledge and resources necessary to realize her dream of becoming a homeowner, Ashley purchased her first home in New Haven last summer. Coincidentally, it was where her grandfather and father once lived, making the moment even more special.

Vacant for 20 years, this historic, multi-family home was identified by the Neighborhood Housing Services of New Haven, an organization committed to empowering families and revitalizing neighborhoods, for restoration just as Ashley was looking for a place for her and her daughter.

“Life just came full circle,” Ashley said. “It’s more than just owning a home for me. This was the way it was supposed to go.”

To get to her move-in moment, however, was a process – albeit a rewarding one. It took patience, Ashley said, explaining that she went through the homebuying process, but also had to wait for all the renovation work to be complete. This meant wearing a construction hat and boots as she anxiously monitored the progress on her new home.

“I’m very happy with the outcome,” she said, explaining that it was always her dream to become a homeowner – and a landlord. “I’ve always wanted to have something to leave behind for my daughter.”

While Neighborhood Housing Services of New Haven helped prepare Ashley for her big moment through homeownership classes and was responsible for the renovation work at Ashley’s new home, it was Liberty Bank that ensured Ashley could afford her purchase.

“My experience with Liberty was a 10 out of 10,” she said. “They were always there to answer questions.”

Ashley primarily worked with an affordable lending originator at Liberty, which both processed her loan and helped her secure $80,000 in downpayment funds – money that lessened her financial burden.

Liberty partners with organizations like Neighborhood Housing Services of New Haven, and it works with first-time homeowners to identify and secure financial assistance. In Ashley’s case, money came from the Connecticut Housing Finance Authority (CHFA) Time to Own Program, the Housing Development Fund, Live Where You Work and Forever Home and Home Ownership Matters grants through the NAACP.

Liberty has found that many people don’t even know these funds exist, and Liberty’s affordable lending originators help connect people to these resources, making homeownership possible.

Connecting with the right people has been an important part of her journey, Ashley said, adding that she is grateful for the help she received. As for her advice to aspiring homeowners, Ashley recommends getting to know the right people and educating yourself about budgeting and the homebuying process.

“Knowledge is power,” she said. “By having knowledge, you are one step ahead.”

Other Ways Liberty Helps

Liberty’s good work does not stop with Ashley. The bank helps countless other first-time homebuyers with downpayment assistance in both Connecticut and Massachusetts.

In addition, Liberty has strong relationships with builders who are looking to increase homeownership by coming up with creative solutions to help with today’s housing crisis. Some developments include homes for working families to purchase, and Liberty provides the financing options.

At Liberty, we truly want to help people realize their dream of homeownership. We want to make sure they get any assistance they qualify for, and we want to help ensure their safety and security. We are trained to help our community.

Helping Customers Achieve the Home Ownership Dream

By John Francis, VP, Secondary Markets, Closing & Post Closing Manager, Newtown Savings Bank

The dream of homeownership has long been associated with smiling families and the promise of freedom and long term financial stability. It reflects the belief that an appreciating asset – one that contributes to generational wealth – should be within reach to anyone seeking it. Yet, while the sentiment is meant to inspire hope, for many individuals and families today, homeownership feels less like an achievable dream and more like a distant aspiration.

Today, the average first-time homebuyer is over 40 years old, a record high. The climb in property values over the last six years has also resulted in record equity for homeowners, giving them a nearly insurmountable advantage in buying their next home. In Connecticut, the homebuying landscape is even more challenging, as the state has experienced the fourth-highest property value inflation since the pandemic, which has further increased the buying power of those that realized significant equity growth.

Connecticut's affordable housing challenge differs from much of the country, though it is shared by several neighboring states. In many regions, municipalities can carve out the expansion of new neighborhoods to replenish housing stock. However, the Northeast's population density and limited land availability add another layer of complexity. Connecticut's community banks find themselves at the center of the effort to address affordable housing needs; a role for which they are uniquely equipped.

Banks have long pursued innovative ways to support those in their communities that need it most. For decades, affordable housing, community revitalization, and home renovation programs have been an essential part of those efforts. It would make sense, then, for those same community banks to be leaned on for guidance and support as programs like these could help in addressing today's inventory shortages.

Legislative efforts such as H.B. 8002 and 8-30g are helping expand access to more affordable rental options. While this does provide meaningful relief by offering stable housing and helping residents overcome economic hardship, the clearest path to long-term financial stability is through homeownership. Individuals and families discover the lasting financial benefits of owning a home, making it one of the most powerful drivers of long term financial success for customers. This is where community banks can play an important role.

It starts with understanding the needs of the community. The efforts won't matter if a borrower can't pay back their loan, so a one-size-fits-all approach is rarely effective. Loan programs are often designed for customers below certain area median income levels, where debt-to-income ratios are tighter and ability to repay under even more scrutiny.

While rising property values contributing to higher payments may be outside a bank's control, interest rates are not. Designing custom programs with low but responsible interest rates can move a customer from unqualified to qualified. This can be done without harming the bank's net interest margin needed for its own sustained growth, and, with the right approach, without any additional credit risk. Of course, all programs should be thoroughly researched and tailored to meet customers' specific needs.

John Francis

While custom programs are important, banks are not alone in addressing affordable housing. There are countless nonprofits that share this goal. Partnering with institutions such as Building Neighborhoods Together can open dialogue helping uncover barriers facing local communities. If there are credit-challenged customers, financial education initiatives or support from organizations like Bedrock Credit America can provide meaningful assistance. If there are downpayment limitations, resources such as CHFA's Time to Own or Downpayment Assistance Program, Federal Home Loan Bank of Boston's grant programs, or initiatives offered directly through cities like Bridgeport, Hartford, and Hamden can help bridge the gap.

For buyers considering distressed properties, programs such as FHA 203k and Fannie Mae's Homestyle Renovation are designed to help finance renovation costs. Additional opportunities exist as well, including VA Loans to support veterans, USDA loans for rural communities, and various CHFA programs to help first responders, teachers, and those with disabilities.

These are only a few examples of how unique programs and meaningful partnerships can help community banks better serve the community and make a difference with affordable housing. Any one of these services can be exactly what a household needs, but a diverse approach is when a bank will truly see its efforts bear fruit. However each institution chooses to help its community, it's important to remember to conduct research, listen to homebuyers' needs, and stay educated throughout the process.

Community banks don't do this because they have an obligation to do so, they do it because it's the right thing to do. At the end of the day, a rising tide raises all ships, so let your institution be the lighthouse that shines on each wave. 🌊

“ While rising property values contributing to higher payments may be outside a bank's control, interest rates are not. ”

CBA 2025 Annual Meeting & Conference Draws 300 Attendees

By Christopher Blake, CBA Quarterly Assistant Editor & Communications Coordinator; Connecticut Bankers Association

Throughout the CBA's 2025 Annual Meeting & Conference, more than 300 attendees participated in a mix of general and breakout sessions covering a wide range of timely topics. These included artificial intelligence, the evolving landscape of digital assets, an outlook on politics and public policy, updates on Connecticut's business and regulatory environment, and the future of commercial lending. Together, these sessions provided both strategic perspective and practical takeaways for navigating an increasingly complex banking industry.

The business sessions of the conference officially kicked off on Friday, November 7, with a comprehensive state and federal legislative and regulatory update. This session, led by Art Corey, CBA's senior vice president and general counsel, alongside Scott Brown, partner at the Washington, D.C.-based law firm Luse Gorman, set the tone for the day by outlining key developments shaping the banking sector. Building on this foundation, Doug Parrott, Secretary of the Independent Community Bankers of America (ICBA) and President & CEO of State Bank of Toulon (IL), shared an update on ICBA programs and initiatives, highlighting national priorities and advocacy efforts.

The morning continued with a keynote address from Joanne Woodward, Executive Vice President of Public Policy and President of The Travelers Institute. Her presentation offered a comprehensive look at the political and policy landscape in Washington, D.C., providing valuable context for the year ahead. This was followed by a highly-anticipated session with Connecticut Banking Commissioner Jorge Perez, who delivered an update on the department's regulatory activities and priorities.

Adding a regional perspective, CBA President & CEO Tom Mongellow led an engaging conversation with Chris DiPentima, President & CEO of the Connecticut Business and Industry Association (CBIA). Their conversation, "The State of Business in Connecticut: Unpacking the Policies Shaping Our Economy and Future," explored the economic forces and policy decisions influencing the state's business climate.

Saturday's sessions continued to build on these themes, beginning with the CBA's Annual Meeting. Presided by outgoing Board Chairman David A. Schneider, CEO of Fairfield County Bank, the meeting marked an important transition in leadership. During this meeting, the CBA's 2025-26 officers and Board of Directors were officially elected, including incoming Chairman Martin G. Morgado, President & CEO of Ives Bank.

Following the business meeting, attendees turned their attention back to industry trends and forward-looking discussions. Gerald Gagne, Principal and CEO of Wolf & Company, led a panel exploring the current state of digital assets and what lies ahead for the banking industry. Later, Tom Mongellow moderated a conversation with Kathleen Kraninger, President & CEO of the Florida Bankers Association, focusing on the evolving regulatory environment under the Trump administration and its implications for financial institutions.

Rounding out the day, economist Alex Chausovsky provided unique and insightful analysis of national and global economic conditions. His analysis provided attendees with a deeper understanding of the economic forces influencing banking and business decisions.

In addition to the educational programming, the conference offered numerous opportunities for networking and collaboration, reinforcing the value of coming together as an industry. Overall, the 2025 Annual Meeting & Conference successfully combined thought leadership, professional development, and relationship-building, leaving attendees well-equipped for the year ahead. ➦
